

The Way To Glow

A regular facial peel can help reduce the appearance of wrinkles and give you a healthy glow. For a gentler option, try the Keratolyse Vegetal Peel Treatment at Thomas D'Esthetique.

Have you ever wondered why, as you get older, facial pores on your face start to get bigger, fine lines start to appear and a dull pallor starts to set in? These signs are mainly due to the slowdown in the skin cell renewal cycle – skin cells born deep within skin's layers slowly move toward the surface where they die and are eventually shed.

When this process slows down, cells take longer to shed and usually get trapped on skin's surface. A dry layer of excess skin cells forms and this traps dirt, increasing the likelihood of developing clogged pores and acne.

To get rid of this layer, some use an enzyme peel, which "eats up" dead epidermal cells. Others use exfoliants – which usually contains something grainy to scrape off dead skin cells (an action similar to scraping off paint). However, enzyme peels can irritate skin and make it more sensitive. And exfoliants may be too abrasive for skin.

A gentler option is the Keratolyse Vegetal Peel Treatment at Thomas D'Esthetique. It's deep peeling, yet so mild that it can be used on the delicate eye area as well. How it works: Keratolyse bonds with the keratin in dead cells and extracts them from skin. A gentle manual technique is used to remove as much of these cells as possible.

The treatment is formulated by Nelly De Vuyst® of Brussels, Belgium. It was developed over 40 years by a team of physicians, dermatologists and chemists. The brand is known for its Diadermic Method, which means their technology targets specific cell membranes, working on the skin from the inside out.

In the hands of the experts at Thomas D'Esthetique, the Keratolyse Vegetal Peel Treatment helps soften the appearance of fine lines and wrinkles. It also helps reduce the thickness of sun damaged skin, pigmentation, acne scars and dull, rough skin.

"It's so gentle, you will hardly feel it", says Thomas Thong, founder of Thomas D'Esthetique, "It's also suitable for all skin types due to its ingredients derived from organic vegetables."

With no pain involved and so much to gain, why not give your face a new confident glow with the Keratolyse Vegetal Treatment.
